Greenhouse Gases Organization - Part 1

NAVIGATING ENVIRONMENTAL EXCELLENCE
WITH ISO 14064-1:2018

In the face of escalating climate challenges such as floods, landslides, storms, droughts, heatwaves, and hurricanes wreaking havoc worldwide, the undeniable link to global warming compels action. Heightened concerns about climate change prompt organizations to adopt best practices, with a growing commitment to curbing greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions as a vital component of their corporate sustainability commitments.

ISO 14064-1 details principles and requirements for designing, developing, managing, and reporting organization-level GHG inventories. The international standard for quantifying, monitoring, reporting, and Verification of GHG Emissions and/or removals. ISO 14064-1 is a globally recognized standard that provides a comprehensive framework for organizations to quantify and report their greenhouse gas emissions. It assists in establishing a transparent and credible accounting process, fostering a commitment to environmental responsibility.

The key benefit of implementing ISO 14064-1 is the establishment of a robust and internationally recognized framework for organizations to quantify, monitor, and transparently report their greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions. This standard provides a structured approach that brings several advantages:
